Key issues arising for Fylde Borough Council	*30% of the sites workforce started life as an apprentice *Blackpool and Fylde college have a course related to the nuclear industry *Manchester and Lancaster universities are now renewing courses related to the nuclear industry again. Industrial incidents related to safety and health have continued to fall since 2009  springfields will continue to use Freckleton marsh treatment plant until 2017 for disposal of low level waste that is either buried in a deep trench or in sealed containers *Springfields sister plant in Columbia America which is involved in the same kind of work... has been closed for several months due to an inadequate safety culture and a build up of uranium *There was a report on the BBC 1 programme on Sellafield which highlighted a number of safety issues including safety issues with a lack of personnel, hundreds of cracks in the Magnox storage facilities leading to seepage. One of these storage facilities has a layer of radioactive sludge which is slowly being removed to another storage facility. Many of the problems at this site are because they were built in the 1950s and the concrete is losing its integrity. According to the regulator" a considerable amount of work is still required to clean up out of date facilities at Sellafield and decommission their older plants, but this does not mean they pose an immediate safety risk to workers or the public"
